OP screening company makes a second acquisition in 3 months

Overland Park, KS: Overland Park-based Examinetics Inc. continued its buying streak with a second acquisition since December. The occupational health screening company acquired Enviromed Corp., which provides mobile hearing testing throughout the Eastern United States. Examinetics did not disclose the value of the deal.

Employers with workers that are exposed to noise levels above 85 decibels are required to monitor their hearing over time. The mobile test uses an audiometer and pair of headphones to measure subjects' ability to differentiate different sounds, pitches and frequencies in each ear.

Less than three months ago, Examinetics acquired another company, Occupational Testing Group, allowing the company to provide more types of screenings in a broader market. "With the addition of OTG and Enviromed to our national platform, we are now delivering services to more than 15,000 locations annually," Examinetics CEO Troy Hepner said in a release. "We are extremely excited to add these customers into our portfolio and look forward to providing comprehensive solutions to address their risk management and compliance needs."

Enviromed is based in the Philadelphia suburb of Lindenwold, N.J.
